Fairleigh Dickinson University

Fairleigh Dickinson University, New Jersey’s largest private university, is a nonsectarian, coeducational institution offering more than 100 degree programs on the undergraduate, graduate and professional levels. The University offers programs through the Silberman College of Business, the Maxwell Becton College of Arts and Sciences, University College: Arts·Sciences·Professional Studies and the Anthony J. Petrocelli College of Continuing Studies. Fairleigh Dickinson is the first traditional university in the world to require every undergraduate to take one online course per every 32 credits. The program features online study with Global Virtual Faculty™ - a cadre of distinguished scholars and professionals from around the world. Fairleigh Dickinson University is committed to preparing world citizens through global education.

In his classic text, Innovation and Entrepreneurship, Peter F. Drucker noted that the founders of Fairleigh Dickinson were “…one of the new generation of American academic entrepreneurs” in the higher education system after World War II. At the time of its creation, FDU was a private university that targeted “mid-career” students as well as the traditional high school graduates. Throughout the years, the University has retained its entrepreneurial spirit as it has continually modified its curriculum and schedules and created new venues to fulfill its mission.
