Presentation Highlights

Scott will discuss how Ingersoll Rand is creating a culture that is focused on sustainability by:

- Incorporating energy efficiency and sustainability – An Executive Dilemma
- Walking the Talk: best practices in incorporating sustainability in an enterprise
- Designing for Sustainability (increasing employee capabilities and the future product portfolio)
- Operational Excellence (building a business case for more sustainable manufacturing centers)
- Engaging Employees (building champions and personalizing sustainability)

W. Scott Tew, founder and executive director of the Center for Energy Efficiency and Sustainability, leads a global group of experts dedicated to integrating best practices for the long-term use of energy and other resources. His team shapes the future of energy efficiency and sustainability for Ingersoll Rand and the industry, and supports the Ingersoll Rand mission to become the world leader in creating and sustaining safe, comfortable and efficient environments.

The Center for Energy Efficiency and Sustainability supports all Ingersoll Rand businesses and brands and is responsible for forward-looking green initiatives including product and service innovation, operational excellence, education, engagement, product standards and advocacy. Prior to this role, Scott served in senior positions in government and public affairs including community engagement and industry trade relations. Scott has led high profile programs to advocate for energy efficiency, green buildings and greenhouse gas emissions standards and policies and has lived and worked around the world managing global environmental policy initiatives. He has graduate and undergraduate degrees in environmental science and ecology from Livingston University. Scott plays key roles in several advocacy groups including: the Alliance to Save Energy; the Center for Energy, Development and the Global Environment at Duke University; the Innovators Working Group for Viridis Partners; and the US and India Green Building Councils.
