Recognizing/Acting on the Early Warning Signs of Violence

Extreme violence is rarely an isolated event but, rather, the last link in a chain of progressively dangerous, interdependent and highly visible behaviors. Troubling behaviors in their early stages are largely correctable and minimally volatile. When these behaviors are allowed to progress over time to more aggressive acts, the offender becomes increasingly frustrated, committed to and confident of his/her ability to deliver violence.

Most people who commit extreme violence do not just snap without warning and may even tell others what they plan to do. Violence profiles list various personality traits and behaviors associated with those who have used extreme violence in the past. Identifying at-risk characteristics can bring attention to a troubled individual or may suggest that the process of manufacturing violence has begun. While few of these individuals will commit extreme violence, they should be monitored closely when several of the following behaviors accompany one or more of the personality traits.

Behaviors
- History of aggression/violence/bullying
- Specific/detailed threats to harm another
- Destruction of personal and/or school property
- Recent attempts to secure weapons
- A pattern of poor interpersonal relationships
- Recent attempts/talk of suicide
- Involvement with hate groups or criminal gangs
- Frequently angry, easily frustrated
- Defiance of authority

Personality Traits
- Drug/alcohol abuse
- Mental health issues
- Socially isolated
- Recent problems at home/school/work
- Extreme paranoia/suspicion
- Recent serious attacks to self-esteem

Preventing a Crisis

Violence prevention is best accomplished by stopping the process before it gets started. Maintaining a healthy campus environment and addressing minor violations of University policy lower the risk of aggressive responses and increase the possibility of peaceful solutions. Recognizing the early warning signs alerts us that the process of violence may have begun and provides opportunities to intervene before an individual becomes committed to violence. Various strategies to prevent a crisis include:

- Communicate a clear policy against and consequences for violent behavior.
- Identify potential offenders and victims early.
- Report threatening behaviors promptly; respond quickly to reports.
- Train/sensitize staff to conflict management, communication and anger control skills.
- Identify resources (internal and external) for faculty, staff and students.
- Conduct focus groups, surveys to determine the wellness of the workplace.
- Do not assume threatening behaviors will stop; take all threats seriously.

Defusing a Crisis

When confronted with a potentially dangerous individual, actions should be taken to defuse the situation. In dealing with an aggressive person, it is best to refrain from hostile, threatening, or apathetic communications. Rejecting demands from the start, showing disrespect, trivializing the situation or invading the individual’s personal space can set the individual off. Avoid challenging body language such as placing your hands on your hips, moving toward the person, or staring directly at the person. Remain seated and do not attempt to physically touch the individual. Do not agree or argue with distorted statements. The following steps to defuse a situation should be considered.

Do stay calm and control your anger.
Establish ground rules; take breaks to calm the person down.
Focus on positive outcomes and the consequences of violent actions.
Uncover what the person wants; repeat what is requested.
Speak slowly, confidently, quietly; utilize active listening techniques.
Encourage the person to consider possible solutions; offer support.

Post-crisis Response

Do not expect or pretend that business as usual conditions exist after there is a serious violent attack. You should expect that many will feel stressed following an incident. The following strategies should be considered.

- Provide detailed facts (who, what, where, when) to public safety, human resources and the dean of students.
- Discuss/debrief the incident with your staff/faculty and/or students.
- Consider the need for immediate counseling services.
- Don’t feel that you should have all the answers; ask for help.
- Look for signs of stressed individuals.
- Change locks, add alarms and other types of physical security.
